Mind The Gap: Spanish businesses could do better with COVID-19 safety measures for customers

As businesses across Spain are adapting to meet customer expectations in relation to safety measures, it has been seen that failure to do so negatively impacts customer feelings of safety, impacting footfall and hitting profits. This is the overarching finding of a recent survey carried out by MSPA Europe/Africa during July as lockdown measures continue to ease across the country.

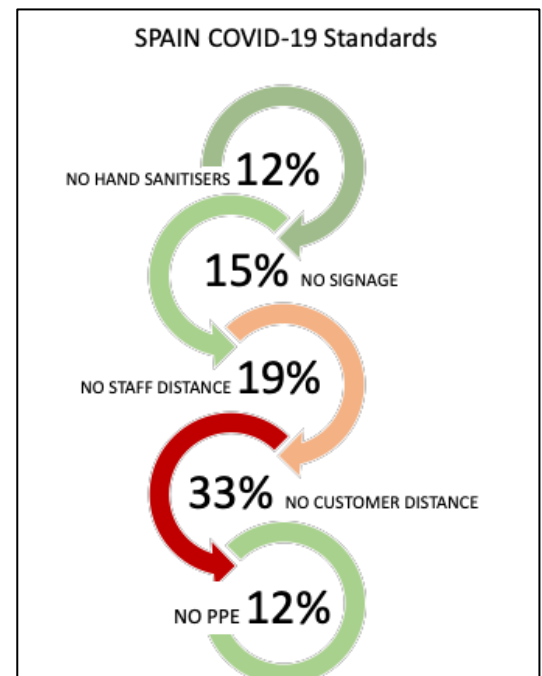

The survey evaluated the experiences members of the general public when visiting 398 locations ranging from shops, supermarkets, car dealers, fast food and dining establishments. Based on the principles of COVID transmission prevention, findings were split out into performance on sanitisation, signage, staff and customer social distancing and PPE. Respondents were asked about their resultant feeling of safety and likelihood to return to the places they visited.

The findings show some gaps in compliance to government guidelines with a potential health impact and a potential impact on consumer confidence and advocacy levels.

Despite relatively good use of signage, 2 out of 5 staff failed to adhere to social distancing guidelines, with supermarket staff least likely to be compliant. Customers too were found to be ignoring safety measures in one third of the locations visited – again people supermarkets were the biggest offenders.

Over one tenth of locations failed to provide hand sanitiser and over 1 in 10 were not providing sufficient PPE for staff.

Stefaan Vandroogenbroeck, President of MSPA Europe/Africa commented: “All these measures are directly within in the control of businesses and efforts must be increased to ensure customers feel safe in their locations. This can only be achieved by training those in the frontline and regularly monitoring every location. Safety is the number one customer priority for the foreseeable future, and companies that ignore these warnings will struggle to weather this storm”.
