Mind the Gap: Czech Republic businesses struggle to comply with measures to make customers feel Covid-safe

Businesses and customers continue to struggle hard to meet Covid-19 safety protocols and impact safety and sales results. This is the findings of a survey carried out by MSPA Europe/Africa during November 2020.

The survey evaluated the experiences of members of the general public when visiting 311 locations in November (and 143 in July) ranging from fashion & general retail stores, supermarkets, car dealers and fast food to dining establishments, where open. Based on the principles of Covid-19 transmission prevention, findings were split out into performance on sanitisation, signage, staff and customer social distancing and PPE. In the second phase we added customer mask wearing as this now is recommended. Respondents were asked about their resultant feeling of safety and likelihood to return to the places they visited.

The findings show mixed levels of compliance to government guidelines with a potential health impact and a definitive impact on consumer confidence and advocacy levels.

Despite good scores in some areas nearly 1 in 3 staff failed to adhere to social distancing guidelines and nearly half of locations had poor customer distancing. Customers and staff were frequently found to be ignoring safety measures and businesses need to consider what to do to enforce these where they can, signage is not always enough.

There is essential behaviour which needs encouraging from both a frontline employee and a customer perspective.

Stefaan Vandrogenboeck, President of MSPA Europe/Africa commented: "All these measures are directly within in the control of businesses and customers so efforts must be maintained to ensure customers feel safe in their locations. This can only be achieved by training those in the frontline and regularly monitoring every location. Safety is still the number one customer priority for the foreseeable future, and companies that keep this at the forefront of their operation will weather this storm".
